All children, youth, and families have strengths. A key component of DCYF practices is the principle that we prepare youth for adulthood and that we listen to youth and their voices are heard, valued, and considered. This process assesses the adult living strengths and needs of youth in DCYF placement through their voice in order to plan for their acquisition of adult living skills as part of the transition out to the community and into adulthood.

Practice Guidance

If a youth is in a Residential Treatment Program do I complete the adolescent assessments and plans?

- The Residential Treatment Program (except for shelter care programs) is responsible for completing Form 1690 Needs Assessment, the Casey Life Skills Assessment, Form 1695 Adult Living Plan, and Form 1984 Post-Care Plan with the youth pursuant to Administrative Rule He-C 6350.26(e).

- The CPSW/JPPO should make sure that the forms are received timely and subsequently review the forms for completeness and alignment with the case goals before being documenting them in the file.
